A UNIQUE INSIDER VIEW OF THE NEW ZEALAND ARMY

How do we understand the functions of militaries of democratic societies? How good soldiers are made, how they behave when posted overseas, the issue of gender and the increased use of military beyond their core functions all demand a closer academic examination.

This edited collection brings together work by exciting new scholars as well as established academics, and examines the identity and functions of the New Zealand Army from a range of perspectives. Drawing on anthropology, political studies, international relations, development studies, law, and defence and security studies, it provides a multi-faceted view of one military organisation, and helps further our understanding of the character and the challenges of military personnel and institutions in the twenty-first century.

ABOUT THE EDITOR

Associate Professor Bethan Greener teaches in the School of People, Environment and Planning at Massey University. Her research focuses on international relations and international security. The author of two books on international policing and police and military roles in peace and stability operations, she is interested in investigating how states seek to provide for security and what this means for world order. Her ongoing interests also include the role of organisations such as the UN, the relationship between liberalism and the use of force, how states seek to use their various agencies for security provision, South Pacific security and the nature of the relationship between public and private security actors.
